Registration is Now Open for 2015 SKYWARN® Spotter Classes

The National Weather Service in Northern Indiana in cooperation with area Emergency Management has set up SKYWARN® Spotter Training for 2015. Emergency Managers from 22 counties have identified locations to host these classes. SKYWARN® Spotters are critical to fulfilling the National Weather Service mission of saving lives and protecting property.

The ground truth reports from SKYWARN® Spotters are an integral part of the mission critical warning process that combines advanced Doppler radar data and meteorological skills. SKYWARN® Spotter observations also provide information when compiling documentation of severe weather events, verification of warnings and service assessments. These reports become part of the Storm Data publication, providing data on a variety of severe and unusual weather phenomenon, including statistics on deaths, injuries, and property and crop damage nation-wide.

“Year after year, reports from SKYWARN® volunteers assist the National Weather Service in issuing more timely and accurate warnings based on real-time reports throughout our 37 County Warning Area” stated Michael Lewis, Warning Coordination Meteorologist. “It is the National Weather Service mission to issue warnings to protect life and property.”

To be recognized as SKYWARN® Spotter, volunteers will need to complete two free online courses and attend a classroom SKYWARN® Training. Additionally, these volunteers are encouraged to work with their county Emergency Management office to maintain county-specific training requirements.

Volunteers interested in attending the SKYWARN® Spotter Training are encouraged to register online. A list of available training dates, times and locations is online at the Northern Indiana National Weather Service website (<http://www.weather.gov/iwx>). Links to prerequisite training requirements are also available from each registration page.
